(= to have that task, &c.), by participle in dus: I have got many letters to write, multæ mihi epistolæ scribendæ sunt. ☞ "To have got" [= to have] a book, &c., is objected to by Webster and other writers as a vulgarism; but it is not only thoroughly idiomatical, but may be easily justified. "To get" being "to acquire" (receive, obtain, &c.); "to have got" = "to have acquired" (received, obtained), and so "to have," "to possess;" and it so happens that the sister word has the same peculiarity in Greek, κτ-άομαι, "I get" [where the radicals κτ correspond to gt, the smooth mute κ having passed, according to Grimm's law, into the middle mute g]; *κέκτημαι, "I have got" = "I have" or "possess." Webster also objects to "I could not get him to do this" [Addison], and "I could not get the work done," as not elegant. It is to be hoped that the time for sacrificing our old idioms to modern and sickly notions of elegance is pretty nearly gone by. ticular substantives with which "have" is used). Not to have, carēre aliquā re : to have enough, nihil ultra flagitare : no longer to have a parent, parentibus orbum, or orbatum, or privatum esse : he has enough to live upon, habet quî or unde utatur : any thing has something in it, non temere fit ; est aliquid in re momenti ; alicui rei subest aliquid (e. g., a report has something in it).

Hence, "to have," in a wider acceptation, (a) e. g., to have received : now you have my plans, habes consilia nostra : you have it now, hem tibi ! you have this for your time-serving, hunc fructum refers ex isto tuo utriusque partis studio. (b) To have heard, to know; e. g., to have any thing on good authority, aliquid certo auctore or certis auctoribus cognovisse : I have the information from your brother, hoc accepi a fratre tuo ; hoc audivi de fratre tuo. (c) To get, to take, to receive, accipere (of what you deliver over) : there you have the book, accipe librum (as Hor., Sat., 1, 4, 14, accipe tabulas) : here you have two hundred quires (of paper), tu vero aufer ducentos scapos (Cic., Att., 5, 4, 4) : there ! you have it ! utere, accipe ! (as Plaut., Mil., 3, 1, 176) : new bread may always be had here, semper hic recentis panis est copia : that can easily be had, parabilis. (d) To wish or desire to have; i. e., to demand, request, order, wish, desire ; e. g., what would you have ? quid vis ? quid postulas ? what would you have with me ? quid est, quod me velis ? I would have you do so and so, tu velim facias, &c.

(2) To hold in the hand, to carry or wear on one's self, habēre : tenēre (to hold) : gestare (to carry, bear, wear) : to have in one's hands, (in) manibus habēre or tenēre : to have in the hand (to lead), manu ducere : to have about, secum habēre, or portare, or gestare ; esse cum aliquâ re (e. g., cum telo) : to have something perpetually in one's mouth (to be continually mentioning it), aliquid semper in ore habēre.

(3) In connection with the infinitive, in various relations. (a) The infinitive after "I have" is often equivalent to a relative clause ; e. g., "I have nothing to accuse old age of" = "I have nothing of which I may accuse old age," nihil (or non) habeo, quod incūsem senectutem ; hihil habeo, quod ad te scribam : I have nothing to write, non habeo, quod scribam (but in non habeo, quid scribam, habeo would = scio, cognitum or perspectum habeo, I do not know what to write ; vid. Beier, Cic., Off., 2, 2, 7 ; Krüger, 615, Obs. 6) : this is what I had to say, hæc habui, quæ dicerem (☞ not hæc habui dicere, which is a Grecism) : he has nothing to accuse us of, non est, cur nos incuset. (b) The infinitive after "to have" is sometimes equivalent to an expression of duty, or, rather, denotes a task. Here it must be rendered by the participle of the future passive ; as, every one has to employ his own judgment, suo cuique judicio utendum est : I have many letters to write, multæ literæ mihi scribendæ sunt. In this construction, in the consequence of a conditional proposition, "I would have," &c., fuit is more common than fuisset ; e. g., if you had lived, you would have had to undergo any thing, si vixisses, aliquid tibi subeundum fuit. ‖ To have a thing done = to get it done, is to be translated by curare, with participle in dus. I had him honorably buried, funus ei satis amplum faciendum curavi. But ☞ a person is, as in English, often said to do what he really gets done for him ; I will have you put to death, interficiam te ; wishing to have a ring made, quum vellet annulum sibi fieri. ‖ Have = have caught (colloquial) : I have you (there) ! teneo te ! or hic te teneo ! (colloquial ; e. g., teneo te, inquam, nam, &c., Cic., Acad., 2, 48, 148 ; hic te, inquit, teneo ; non est istud judicium pati, Cic., Quint., 10, 63). ‖ In answers, "I have" is really equivalent to the perfect definition of the verb asking the question : "thus have you conquered ?" "I have" = "I have conquered," vici. If the question is, "have you got it ?" = "do you possess it ?" the answer will be in the present : have you got it ? tenesne ? I have, teneo.

HE, is implied in Latin by the form of the verb, and in most cases sufficiently so. But if a particular emphasis is to be laid on it, it is usual to employ the demonstrative pronoun ille, or, with reference to a third party, iste ; and if he is = he himself, the master, &c., it is rendered by ipse (vid. Runkh., Ter., Andr., 2, 2, 23) ; e. g., they say that the Pythagoreans used to answer, "he hath said it," Pythagoræos ferunt respondēre solitos, ipse dixit. The pronoun is also expressed when two actions of the same person are contrasted. Is is used (1) of a person spoken of by name before (e. g., Polemarchus est Murgentinus, vir bonus atque honestus. Is quum, &c. ; and (2) as the simple, unemphatic antecedent to qui ; he who, is qui (often qui only ; and in general propositions, si quis). ☞ What has been just said refers only to "he" in the nominative ; for the other cases a demonstrative pronoun must be used, except where it is sufficiently implied by the context. Also for "he," "him," &c., when = "a person," the Latins use homo ; as, do you know him ? nosti hominem ? I love him very much, valde hominem diligo. In the accusative with infinitive "he" must be translated by se ("that" being omitted). In oblique narration (to which the construction of accusative with infinitive belongs, when the principal verb and the infinitive have the same subject), "him," &c., is translated by sui, sibi, se, when the person so designated is the nominative of the principal sentence ; by ipse for the nominative, and where the use of the reflexive would occasion an ambiguity ; e. g., putat hoc sibi nocēre : Gaius contemnebat divitias, quod se felicem reddere non possent. Sometimes there are also persons spoken of, and others spoken to. These must be denoted by is, hic, ille. Legationi Ariovistus respondit ; si quid ipsi a Cæsare opus esset, sese ad eum venturum fuisse ; si quid ille se velit, illum ad se venire oportēre (here the speaker, Ariovistus, uses ipse and sui of himself ; and having first named Cæsar, the person spoken of, he afterward designates him by is and ille). So, too, if he had spoken to Cæsar, the direct si quid mihi a te opus esset would become si quid sibi (or ipsi) a Cæsare (or ab eo, ab illo) opus esset, &c. But even of the speaker himself, the demonstrative "is" is sometimes found ; Socrates respondit, sese meruisse . . . ut ei victus quotidianus in Prytaneo publice præberetur (Cic., Or., 1, 54). Vid. ASCRIBE.

IN, (1) In answer to where? in what? in ablative. ☞ Since, however, in denotes only a part of the whole space, it is not expressed, but the ablative only used, when the space or place is not considered with reference to any one part, but as a general specification; thus, he accuses Alexander in one of his letters, epistolâ quadam Alexandrum accusat (i. e., the accusation forms the general subject of the letter, Cic., Off., 2, 15, 53); but, he writes in one of his letters, scribit in literis (= he introduces the mention of this in one of his letters, Cæs., B. G., 5, 49): in the book which I have entitled Hortensius, I have done my best to recommend the study of philosophy, cohortati sumus, ut maxime potuimus, philosophiæ studium eo libro, qui est inscriptus Hortensius (the whole book treats of philosophy, Cic., De Div., 2, 1, 1): what these are [the duties of justice] has been stated in the preceding book, ea quæ essent, dictum est in libro superiore (in one chapter of it [viz., book 1, chap. vii.], Cic., Off., 2, 13): in Greece, in Græciâ: in the whole of Greece, totâ Græciâ. ☞ When a writer is quoted without mention of the particular work, "in" is translated not by in, but apud [though Quint., 9, 4, 18, uses "in" in this way]; e. g., it is written in Xenophon, apud Xenophontem scriptum est. ☞ "In" is also omitted before the names of towns; singular nouns of the first and second declension being placed in the genitive, others in the ablative, without any preposition. The names of small islands follow the same rule, those of larger islands take the preposition, Z., 398. ☞ If extension through a space is denoted, the Latins use per, as the Greeks ἀνά: he had debts in every country, æs alienum per omnes terras. The other instances in which "in," in answer to "where?" "in what?" is translated by a simple case, will be found under the verbs after which this occurs. ☞ It may still be remarked, that "in" before a substantive is often translated by a present participle; e. g., with a stick in his hand, baculum manu tenens [to stand by with a stick in his hand, cum baculo astare]; in the sight of the army, inspectante exercitu; sometimes by an adjective, as, Davus in the play, Davus comicus †: or by adverbs, in earnest, serio; in truth, vere; in abundance, abundanter: or the Latins choose some other preposition, as, in joke, per jocum; in my presence, coram me. ☞ "To have an excellent friend in such a person," is habêre aliquem bonum amicum (bonum amicum in aliquo habêre would be absurd): to have found a courageous friend or foe in any body, aliquem fortem amicum or inimicum expertum esse (Nep.). ☞ "In ready money," "in gold," &c., are expressed literally, at least in post-Augustan writers, in pecuniâ, in auro; cf. Suet., Tib., 49; Galb., 8.

(2) In answer to "whither?" "into what?" implying not merely rest in a place, but previous motion toward it; in with accusative. ☞ With verbs of placing, setting, laying; &c. (ponere, locare, collocare, statuere, constituere), the following rest is principally considered, and "in" with ablative used (Z., 489): only imponere (when it has not the dative of the place where) and reponere mostly take "in" with accusative; so, also, defigere (to fix in); describere, inscribere (to write or inscribe in); and insculpere (to engrave in) are followed by the accusative with "in" (or by the dative). ☞ Haase ad Reisig., note 573, says that ponere in aliquid occurs only in the figurative sense in good authors; e. g., in historiam, Cic.: that imponere in aliquo loco is very rare (e. g., in equuleo impositus, Val. Max.); whereas imponere in navem or naves (regularly), in plaustrum, &c. For in ignem posita est (Ter., And., 1, 1, 102), Bentley's Codicil has imposita; but libros in ignem ponere, Sen., De Irâ, 3, 23. The preposition may also fall away after many verbs compounded with in (e. g., ingrĕdi urbem or in urbem). For these the verbs must be consulted.

(3) With reference to time: (a) In answer to "when?" in with ablative. But here, too, when the whole time is meant (as it usually is) the preposition is omitted, and the ablative only stands: in the present year, hoc anno; in our times, hac ætate. When the circumstances of the time, its dangerous character, &c., are to be noted, in is expressed; e. g., in hoc tempore = "in this critical period," "in this time of distress;" so in illo tempore, hoc quidem in tempore: so when "in time" = "in good time," in tempore is used, "but in both cases the ablative alone also occurs," Z., 475, note. In descriptions of a man's age, either the ablative only is used, or the participle agens, with the accusative of the time; in his eightieth year, octogesimo anno or octogesimum annum agens (cf. Liv., 39, 40): if the date refers to his death, either natus, with accusative of time, is used, or the genitive only, if closely joined with the substantive; e. g., Alexander died in his thirty-fourth year, decessit Alexander annos tres et triginta natus; or Alexander annorum trium et triginta decessit (Z., 397).

(b) In answer to "within what time?" ablative alone, or with in or intra [Agamemnon ... decem annis unam cepit urbem, Nep. Senatus decrevit, ut ... in diebus proximis Italiâ decederent, Sall. Tarraconem paucis diebus pervenit, Cæs., omnia commemorabo, quæ inter or intra decem annos nefarie facta sunt, in these last ten years; intra nonum diem opera absoluta sunt, before nine days had expired]—intra, inter (inter marks only the duration of the time that has elapsed while any thing was taking place, not the points from which to which, which is denoted by intra). ☞ In so many days, years, &c., after another event, is variously translated: (I will do something) in eight days from the date of this letter, octo diebus, quibus has literas dabam; in four days from his death, quatriduo, quo is occisus est; I hope to see him in three days from the date of this letter, aliquem triduo quum has dabam literas, exspectabam: so for years; tribus annis (or tertio anno) postquam venerat; post tres annos (or annum tertium) quam venerat; tribus annis or tertio anno, quam (or quum, or quo, quibus) venerat.

(c) During what time, per (if the whole time is intended; e. g., the stars are visible in the night, per noctem cernuntur sidera: in these last few days, per hos dies, in a negative sentence; e. g., nulla abs te epistola venerat): inter: intra (within; with reference to past time; qui intra annos quatuordecim tectum non subiissent, Cæs., B. G., 1, 36; omnia ... quæ inter quatuordecim annos postquam judicia ad senatum translata sunt, nefarie flagitioseque facta sunt, Cic., Verr., 1, 13).

(4) In respect of, with regard to; ablative only (to express a particular circumstance or limitation; e. g., æquare aliquem sapientiâ, in wisdom; meâ sententiâ, judicio, &c., in my opinion, judgment): ab (especially of that in respect of which a man is strong, well or ill prepared, &c.; e. g., firmus ab equitatu, strong in cavalry; ab omni parte beatus, in every respect): ad (with reference to an object or purpose: ad speciem magnificus, splendid in appearance: ad consilia prudens, wise in counsel; ad labores belli impiger, unwearied in the labors of war, &c.).

(5) Relations in which "in" is translated by other prepositions, or by some of those already mentioned in other relations.

(a) Ad [vid. (4)]. (1) In the likeness, manner, &c., of, ad modum; ad effigiem, similitudinem, or speciem alicujus rei: (2) = "in comparison of," nihil ad hanc rem; ad hunc hominem.

(b) Apud: (1) "in" an author [vid. (1)]: (2) apud locum for in loco, "very rare in Cicero, very common in Tacitus;" cf. Zumpt, and Orelli ad Cic., Verr., 4, 48, cœnam dabat apud villam in Tyndaritano; so apud forum modo e Davo audivi, Ter., Andr., 2, 1, 2.

(f) Ab: (1) ab initio, "in the beginning," not necessarily implying from that time onward; e. g., Consuli non animus ab initio, non fides ad extremum defuit: ab initio hujus defensionis dixi: (2) to be in our favor, a nobis facere (of a thing); a nobis stare (of persons): (3) = in consequence of, cum misericordiâ ab recenti memoriâ perfidiæ auditi sunt; a superstitione animi (in consequence of his superstitious feelings, Curt.).

(g) Cum, before the name of a dress; majorem partem diei cum tunicâ pullâ sedêre solebat et pallio: also, to do any thing in contempt of us, cum contemtione nostri aliquid facere (Cæs.).

(h) Ex, (1) before the name of that in which any thing is cooked or drunk, &c., ex aquâ, vino, &c.: coquere or bibere: (2) = "in consequence of," "in accordance with," ex senatûs consulto; ex testamento, &c.; e naturâ vivere; vid. (e).

(i) Præ = "in comparison of;" Romam præ suâ Capuâ irridebant; cf. (a).

(j) Pro: pro portione, in proportion; pro ratâ parte, in a proper proportion.

(k) In: (1) in length, breadth, &c., in longitudinem, latitudinem [vid. LENGTH, BREADTH]: (2) aliquid in manibus est, is in hand (= is commenced); aliquid in manibus habêre, to have any thing in hand = to be engaged upon it. ☞ Now and then in with accusative is found where we should have expected in with ablative, but only in a few political and legal expressions: in potestatem, amicitiam, ditionem, &c., esse or manêre (Cic., Div. in Cæc., 20; in Verr., 5, 30); mihi in mentem est, comedy [Bentl. on Ter., Heaut., 2, 33]. (3) "As far as in me lay," quantum in me fuit, &c.

(l) Super = "in addition to:" super annonam bellum premit; super morbum etiam fames affecit exercitum. ☞ By an English idiom, an "in" at the end of a clause, after an infinitive, may = "in which," and is to be translated by in quo (quâ, quo) or ubi; e. g., unless he should have a country to triumph in, nisi ... ubi triumpharet, esset habiturus. He had made choice of Piso's house to reside in, Pisonis domum, ubi habitaret, legerat (Cic.).

(6) ‖ With the participial substantive; quum, with the indicative (of two statements that are virtually identical, or of two actions that are necessarily inseparable; e. g., "you do well in loving the child;" i. e., your loving the child is also doing a good action, præclare facis, quum puerum diligis; so, quum in portum dico, in urbem dico, in saying into the port, I virtually say into the city). My object in doing any thing was, &c., quod aliquid feci, eo pertinuit ut, &c. (e. g., quod autem plures a nobis nominati sunt, eo pertinuit, quod, &c., Cic.).

(7) MISCELLANEOUS: Hand in hand; to take in hand, have in hand, come or fall in any body's hands, &c. [vid. HAND]. To die in any body's arms, inter manus alicujus exspirare (general term); inter manus sublevantis exstingui (of one who is raising the dying person's head); in alicujus amplexu emŏri (in any body's embrace). To buy any thing in, licitatorem apponere (to place a bidder; e. g., I will rather have it bought in than let it go for less, licitatorem potius apponam, quam id minoris veneat, Cic.): it lies in the nature of the thing, ea est natura rei (Cic.): to carry any body away in one's arms, aliquem inter manus auferre: to march in square, ire quadrato agmine: to treat a subject in verse, de aliquâ re versibus scribere: in the Greek language, aliquid Græco sermone or Græcis literis tractare: to do any thing in the hope of any thing, aliquid facere ad spem alicujus rei (e. g., urbem ad spem diuturnitatis condere). I am in hopes that, &c., in spem venio, or magna me spes tenet, &c., with infinitive, or accusative and infinitive: to wound any body in the forehead, face, &c., vulnerare aliquem in frontem, in os (☞ not in fronte; cf. Cæs., B. G., 5, 35).

INABILITY, by circumlocution with facere aliquid non posse, &c.; or non potentem esse alicujus rei or ad aliquid faciendum. [Vid. INCAPABLE.] ☞ Impotentia can only be used either with a genitive, iræ, animi, &c., in the sense of "inability to restrain one's wrath, govern one's temper," &c., or absolutely, in the sense of "weakness," hinc intelligitur . . . tacita impotentiæ exprobratio, Quint., 6, 2, 16. Sometimes imbecillitas, infirmitas (weakness) may serve. ‖ Inability to pay, by circumlocution with solvendo non esse; solvere non posse, non idoneum esse. MUST, s. (New wine), mustum.

MUST, v., is variously expressed : (1) by the participle future passive, to denote obvious necessity ; e. g., we must die, moriendum est : we must confess that every animal is mortal, omne animal confitendum est esse mortale : the person by whom any thing must happen is expressed by the dative ; rarely by a or ab, and that only when a second dative would occasion obscurity ; e. g., every one must use his own judgment, suo cuique judicio utendum est : you must consult respecting the property of many citizens, aguntur bona multorum civium, quibus a vobis consulendum est (here a vobis, on account of quibus, in Cic., Manil., 2, 6 ; on the contrary, ib., 22, 64, two datives). If the verb be transitive, the object is added in the accusative, chiefly by unclassical authors, especially by Varro ; but by classical writers it is changed into the nominative, the participle being in the same gender ; e. g., we must strike into this path, hæc via (nobis) ingredienda est (not hanc viam ingrediendum est) : the orator must regard three points, tria videnda sunt oratori. (2) By oportet (impersonal, δεῖ), to denote necessity which proceeds from grounds of reason, or from the laws of justice, equity, or prudence. Sometimes an accusative with an infinitive follows ; sometimes a simple subjunctive (especially if ambiguity is to be avoided) ; vid. Zumpt, § 625 ; Grotef., § 151, obs. 2 ; e. g., this man must be bad, hunc hominem oportet esse improbum (I have my reason for believing him to be so) : this must (from internal reasons) and ought (on account of external advantage, &c.) to take place, hoc fieri et oportet et opus est : we must despise nothing in war, nihil in bello oportet contemni : there are things which one must not do (ought not to do), even if they are permitted, est aliquid quod non oporteat, etiamsi licet : he who does not know the way to the sea must take a river as his guide, viam qui nescit, quâ devenīat ad mare, eum oportet amnem sibi quærere : you must love myself, not my property, if we are to be good friends, me ipsum ames oportet, non mea, si veri amici futuri simus. (3) By debēre (ὀφείλειν), to specify the necessity which marks a moral obligation, "ought," in a subjective sense ; e. g., you must honor him as your own father, eum patris loco colere debes : we were moved by the misery of our allies ; what must we do now under our own sufferings ? sociorum miseriâ commovebamur ; quid nunc in nostro sanguine facere debemus ? Since debēre does not differ much from officium, the Latins frequently say for "a person must," officium est, and without officium, simply est alicujus (but with this difference, that alicujus officium est = it belongs to a person's obligations ; whereas est alicujus is = it is suitable to any one) ; e. g., a foreigner must mind only his own business, peregrini officium est (i. e., peregrinus debet) nihil præter suum negotium agere : a good orator must have heard and seen much, est boni oratoris (i. e., bonus orator debet) multa auribus accepisse, multa vidisse. This omission of officium is quite common in the expressions, I, thou, you must, meum, tuum, vestrum est. (4) By putare and existimare, in rhetorical style, when the speaker courteously declines to anticipate the judgment of the hearers, but leaves it to them to draw their own conclusions ; e. g., see to what a pass it must come with the state, videte quem in locum rempublicam perventuram putetis (Cic., Rosc. Am., 53, 153 ; cf. Manil., 9, 26) : how many islands must be abandoned ? quam multas existimatis insulas esse desertas ? (Cic., Manil., 11, 32). (5) By opus est (impersonal, χρῆ), to denote subjective need, or that from the doing of which one expects advantage. It is followed either by the accusative and infinitive, or, if the person who must do any thing be named, by ut with a subjunctive, or by the ablative of the perfect participle passive ; e. g., if any thing take place which you must know (i. e., which it is your advantage to know), I will write, si quid erit, quod te scire opus sit, scribam : I must wash myself, mihi opus est, ut lavem : I found that I must look after Hirtius, opus fuit Hirtio convento (cf. Grotef., § 175, b ; Zumpt, § 464, Obs. 1). Also, "must have or use any thing" may be translated by mihi opus est, either impersonally with the ablative, or personally with the nominative of that which one must have ; e. g., we must have a leader and guide, dux et auctor nobis opus est : we must use your influence, auctoritate tuâ nobis opus est (cf. Grotef., § 175, a ; Zumpt, § 464. (6) By necesse est (impersonal, ἀνάγκη ἐστί), to denote strict or extreme necessity. It is followed either by an accusative and infinitive, or by a simple subjective ; e. g., the mortal body must perish some time or other, corpus mortale aliquo tempore perire necesse est : virtue must abominate and hate vice, virtus necesse est vitium aspernetur et oderit : man must die, homini necesse est mori. Also, by necesse est we can express our "must necessarily have ;" e. g., buy not what you want, but what you must necessarily have, emas non quod opus est, sed quod necesse est. (7) By cogi, to denote necessity arising from the will of voluntary agents ; e. g., he found that he must take away his own life (they forced him to do it), coactus est ut vitâ ipse se privaret : the Campanians found that they must rush out at the gates, coacti sunt Campani portis egredi. Also, the active cogere may be used in expressions such as "not as he would, but as he found that he must, by the will of the soldiers," non ut voluit, sed ut militum cogebat voluntas. (☞ Avoid the use of cogi, with reference to necessity arising from circumstances.) (8) By facere non possum, or simply non possum, followed by quin, &c. ; or by fieri non potest, followed by ut non, &c. ; or by non possum non, followed by an infinitive, in the sense of "not to forbear or abstain from," of internal necessity ; e. g., I must cry out, non possum, quin exclamem : I must thank you, non possum, quin tibi gratias agam : you must have known him, fieri non potest, ut eum non cognoris : I must confess that my joy is crowned, &c., non possum non confitēri, cumulari me maximo gaudio, quod, &c. (9) Sometimes there is no occasion for the adoption of any word or phrase distinctly corresponding to our "must ;" e. g., Catulus found that he must yield to his obstinacy, ejus pertinaciæ cessit Catulus (Nep., Han., 1, extr.). ☞ Observe, moreover, the following forms of expression in which the Latin idiom differs from the English : (a) You must (as an emphatic demand), either by the simple imperative or by fac ut, &c. ; e. g., if you are not satisfied with this, you must accuse your own injustice, hæc si vobis non probabuntur, vestram iniquitatem accusatote : you must keep up good spirits and good hope, magnum fac animum habeas et bonam spem : you must not (as an emphatic warning), fac ne, &c. (cause that not, &c.) : cave ne, &c. (take care that not, beware of, &c.) : noli, with an infinitive (be unwilling) ; e. g., you must not wish, cave ne cupias : you must not forget that you are Cicero, noli te oblivisci Ciceronem esse : you must not wish for an impossibility, nolite id velle, quod fieri non potest. (b) If it must be so (in the future), si res ita feret.

OF. ‖ As a sign of the genitive, or denoting possession, is usually expressed by the genitive case in Latin. ☞ Ab, with an ablative instead of the genitive, is poetical; e. g., dulces a fontibus undæ (Virg.). ‖ Denoting origin, beginning, or cause; we sometimes find e or ex; de: but the preposition is used only for the sake of emphasis or perspicuity; for the most part, "of" is expressed by the simple genitive; e. g., rex Macedoniæ or Macedonum, King of Macedon. Sometimes "of" is expressed by the use of an adjective; e. g., a citizen of Athens, civis Atheniensis. In the titles of nobility a is better than de; but it is generally best to employ an adjective; e. g., dux Guisius, the Duke of Guise. To die of a disease, perire a morbo (vid. Bremi, Nep., De Regg., 3, 3): to die of wounds, ex vulneribus perire. When "of" refers to the material of which a thing is made, it is usual not to employ the preposition alone, but to make it dependent on a participle, as factus, expressus, or the like; e. g., poculum ex auro, better poculum ex auro factum; or by the use of an adjective, poculum aureum. ☞ The preposition must not be used when speaking of things as consisting of a certain material: in this case the material must be denoted by an adjective, or by a substantive in the genitive case; e. g., mountains of gold, montes aurei, or montes auri. ‖ Denoting the quality or property of a thing. When a property is considered as manifest or apparent, and so as existing according to the mind or judgment of a spectator, the ablative must be employed; e. g., puella pulchrâ formâ, of a beautiful figure: but when the property is characteristic, and considered as inherent in the subject, then we find the genitive. Hence all descriptions of a thing with reference to its size, weight, age, &c., have the genitive; e. g., pedum quindecim fossa; homo fervidi ingenii; vir magni judicii et summæ facultatis. ‖ In denoting the part of a whole, usually ex, more rarely ab; e. g., nonnulli ab novissimis, some of (Cæs.). ‖ Concerning, respecting, de. What must be thought of those who...? quid de iis existimandum, qui? &c. ‖ Out of, de; ex; inter (among). ‖ Before the name of a town as the native place of a person, "of" is usually expressed by an adjective of the name of the place instead of a preposition; e. g., Lycurgus of Sparta, Lycurgus Spartanus; Pericles of Athens, Pericles Atheniensis. The preposition with the place is sometimes, but rarely, used; as Liv., 1, 50, Turnus ab Aricîâ for Turnus Aricinus. (☞ This mode of writing is almost peculiar to Livy.) ‖ Sometimes "of" is expressed in Latin by the form of construction; e. g., to smell of a thing, sapere rem: of high birth, natus summo loco: of one's own accord, sponte meâ, tuâ, &c. ☞ The city of Rome, urbs Roma (in apposition, not Romæ). ‖ The following instances show how to translate "of" before the participial substantive. (1) By infinitive: let no one repent of having preferred, ne quem pœnitēat sequi maluisse, &c.: I don't despair of there being some one, non despero fore aliquem: (2) quod with subjunctive: I think he should repent of having given up his opinion, ego illi, quod de suâ sententiâ decessisset, pœnitendum censeo: they accused Socrates of corrupting, Socratem accusarunt, quod corrumperet. (3) Instead of reading, he does so and so, quum possit or quum debeat legere (according as the thing not done was a possibility or a duty): why do you cry instead of laughing? cur rides ac non potius lacrimaris? ‖ Miscellaneous. To ask or inquire of any body, quærere aliquid ex [ab, de] aliquo: to consist of any thing, ex aliquâ re constare, consistere; also, of numbers, esse with genitive. To be made of any thing, ex aliquâ re factum, constitutum esse: one of, unus ex, less commonly de.

OFF. ‖ Denoting separation or distance, ab eo (eâ, &c.); de eo (eâ, &c.). But we usually find a (ab), or de in composition with a verb; as, to drive off, avehi; devehi: to bear off, ferre, auferre (properly and figuratively); deportare, reportare, consequi, adipisci (figuratively, to get, acquire, obtain, as victory, fame, &c.): to carry off, ferre, auferre (to acquire, obtain): obtinēre (to obtain something wished for): ex eâ re servare (to save, deliver): to come off, elabi, evadere (e. g., to come off with his life, vivum or salvum evadere; vivum exire): to come off with a light punishment, lēvi pœnâ defungi: to come off unpunished, impune abire; sine pœnâ demitti: to come off fortunately, pulchre discedere (comic): to drive off, abigere, depellere: to go off, abire, discedere; aufugere, profugere (to flee away; the latter especially in a secret manner): to lead off, abducere: to make off, se proripere; se eripere; in pedes se conjicere (to take to one's heels; comic): to make off secretly, profugere; clam aufugere; clam se subducere (to sneak off); clandestinâ fugâ se subtrahere. ‖ As an interjection, Away! away with! tolle, tollite, aufer, auferte (take away! vid. Virg., Æn., 8, 439, tollite cuncta, inquit, cœptos auferte labores): abi! apage te! (go away!) off with you! amove te hinc! abi in malam rem! (=go and be hanged! comic): plural, off with you! procul este!

OFFAL, vilia -um; quisquiliæ (Cic.); intestina, plural (intestines).

OFFENCE. ‖ Displeasure given, injury done, injuria (injury done: when perspicuity allows it, the person who does the injury, and the person to whom the injury is done, may be placed in the genitive; else say, injuria alicui illata, injuria ab aliquo illata): offensio, offensa (offence; the former, which one feels or receives; the latter, of which one is guilty): ignominia (general term, reproach expressed, whether deserved or not): contumēlia (reproach unjustly expressed, insult): molestia (unpleasant, of a thing as burdensome or annoying): dolor (the painful feeling of offence). A grievous offence, injuria acerba; offensio gravis; dolor gravis or acerbus: without offence, sine ullâ contumeliâ. ‖ Displeasure received, injury sustained, offensio. To give offence to any one, offendere aliquem or apud aliquem; in offensionem alicujus incurrere or cadere: I have given great offence to some one, in magnâ offensâ sum apud aliquem: to give great offence by one's mode of life, esse pessimi exempli: to take offence, offensionem accipere (opposed to offensionem deponere): to take offence at a person or thing, in aliquo or in aliquâ re offendere (to have something to object to in a person or thing): fastidire aliquem or aliquid, or in aliquâ re (to feel disgust, to disdain; vid. Liv., 4, 3, and 34, 5, extr.; Cic., Mil., 16, 42): to avoid offence, offensionem effugere. If I may say so without offence, bonâ hoc veniâ tuâ dixerim; pace tuâ dixerim. ‖ Cause of offending, stumbling block, res mali (pessimi) exempli.

OFFEND. ‖ Tr. To displease, offendere aliquem (also, improperly, alicujus aures, &c.): to be offended, offendi: to have grievously offended any body, magnâ in offensâ esse apud aliquem (Cic.); facere aliquem iratum; irritare aliquem or alicujus iram; exacerbare aliquem. I am offended at any thing, aliquid mihi stomacho est; aliquid ægre fero (comedy, aliquid mihi or meo animo ægre est); aliquid mihi molestum est; aliquid me pungit; aliquid me male habet. ‖ To be offensive to, offensioni esse; offensionem or offensam habēre; offensionem afferre (alicui). ‖ Intr. To transgress, peccare. ‖ To offend against (=violate) rules, laws, &c. OMOPLATE, scapula; usually plural, scapulæ.

ON, prep. ‖ (Of place or situation), to the question "where?" in with ablative; e. g., to place on the table, ponere in mensâ (☞ not mensam, because the idea of rest is already included in ponere, according to the Roman conception of the word): super with ablative (of a surface on which any thing is): ad (near; e. g., ad Tiberim habēre hortos, on the Tiber). In many cases where we think of a thing as at rest, the Romans fix on the previous direction and motion, and hence our "on" is to be rendered by ex, de, also by a (ab); e. g., on a march or journey; ex itinere (also in itinere; yet with this difference, that in itinere = during the march, ex itinere = from the march, so that it was uninterrupted for some time; vid. Held, Cæs., B. C., 1, 24): on the right, on the left, a dextrâ, ab lævâ: on the side, a latere: to fight on the walls, de mœnibus pugnare. "On" is expressed by the ablative alone, (a) with substantives of place; e. g., to post armed men on the walls, muris armatos disponere (vid. Held, Cæs., B. C., 1, 21): (b) in expressing a means and instrument which, in Latin, is already within the relation of the ablative case; as, to ride on a horse, equo vehi: to blow on a pipe, tibiis canere: (c) when the Latin preposition is already expressed in a compound verb; as, to sit on horseback, equo insidēre. Observe, also, the following turns of expression: on the platform, pro rostris: pro suggestu (vid. Zumpt, § 311): on the spot, e vestigio; statim; confestim (immediately): on the ground, humi (☞ in humum only in poetry): on all sides, quoquoversus: to hang on a tree, pendēre ex arbore: on your authority, tuā auctoritate; te auctore: on this condition, hāc lege or conditione: to be on any one's side, stare, facere, sentire, esse ab aliquo. ‖ (Of time), to the question "when?" by the simple ablative: on the fourth day, quarto die: on the day, die: on the morning, mane: sometimes employ quum; as, on the day that I thanked you, eo die, quum tibi gratias agerem. With a definite term or point of time at which any thing is to take place, ad is used; e. g., to appear on a (fixed) day, ad diem convenire.

ONCE. ‖ An adverb of time, one time, semel: once one is one, unitas semel posita unitatem facit: once for all, semel (e. g., ut semel dicam; vid. Spald., Quint., 5, 13, 3): once more, iterum (of an action repeated): denuo, de novo (anew, afresh): once already, semel jam: once, or at least not often, semel aut non sæpe certe: more than once, sæpius; plus semel, plus quam semel (☞ Krebs says that plus quam semel, plus semel, do not occur; but they do occur, yet perhaps only in negative sentences; e. g., uterque—non plus quam semel eloquetur, Cic., Off., 3, 16, 51; Lucullus puer apud patrem nunquam lautum convivium vidit, in quo plus semel Græcum vinum daretur, Varr. ap. Plin., 1, 14; id ille non plus quam semel usurpare sustinuit, Vell., 2, 40; ☞ plus vice simplici is poetical): once and again, semel atque iterum (Cæs.); semel iterumque; semel et sæpius (Cic.); non semel (i. e., not once only): once a year, semel in anno: not once, non semel; ne semel quidem: at once, repente, subito (suddenly): simul (at the same time; vid. Liv., 6, 4): una (together): to do two things at once, de eādem fidelia duos parietes dealbare (Curio ap. Cic. Ep., 7, 29, extr.): all at once, omnes simul (all together): omnes universi (all taken together): one at once, singuli, unus post alterum (each one singly, one after the other, with several in succession). At once may also be expressed by the use of distributive numerals; e. g., not more than three at once, non amplius quam terna: once for all, semel: but once, never but once, semel adhuc; semel unquam: once and again, once—then, semel—iterum; semel—deinde. ‖ As an adverb of time, aliquando, and (after the particle ne or si) simply quando (at one time, at some time or other, of time past or future which one does not specify more closely; opposed to nunquam): quondam (once, once in time past, the nearer definition of which is of no concern; opposed to nunc; as, that virtue once existed in this state, fuit, fuit ista quondam in hāc republicā virtus): olim (once, in time past, or in time to come; opposed to nunc, nuper; hence the proper word in fables and narratives): if once, si quando, and simply quando quandoque (in case that once, &c.): quum (then, when; vid. Cic., Cat. Maj., 10, 34): ☞ "For once" may sometimes (in entreaties, &c.) be translated by obsecro, quæso (pray): put yourself for once in my place, fac, quæso, qui ego sum, esse te: once upon a time, olim (☞ semel, as an adverb of time, belongs for the most part, according to Bremi, Nep., Att., 15, 2, to the later period).

ONE, adj. ‖ Opposed to two or more, unus (used also for unicus and idem; necessarily in the plural with substantives which have no singular): unicus (single one, one and more): idem (when several actions or circumstances are to be referred to the same subject): alter (ἕτερος, of things which exist only in pairs; e. g., altero pede claudus): to become one of several, unum fieri ex pluribus: I will still observe one thing, unum illud addam: that is not a matter for one man, illud in unius hominis prudentiam cadere non potest (Col., 5, 1, 1): this one thing disturbs me, that, &c., me una hæc res torquet, quod, &c.: the gods have not given every thing to one man, non omnia eidem dii dederunt; in one word, uno verbo (if only one word follows; vid. Cic., Phil., 2, 22, 54): ut paucis dicam (if only a few words follow): in one tenor, continenter (without interruption; ☞ continuo is wrong): usque (continually): uno tenore (in one course): not one, ne unus quidem, non ullus, nemo unus (not even a single one): non unus, unus et alter item, nonnemo (not one, but several): no one of us, nemo de nobis unus: not one of them, ii nulli: never a one, numquam ullus: one and another, unus et alter; unus alterque (two together): nonnemo, unus et item alter (several): one after the other, alius post alium, alius ex alio, alii super alios, alius atque alius, alius subinde (general term): alter post alterum (of two); deinceps (in uninterrupted succession; of space, time, and order: it is usually placed between the substantive and predicate or pronoun; e. g., horum deinceps annorum): continenter (only before and after the classical period): continue (continually, without intermission; not to be confounded with continuo = immediately thereupon, without interruption. The Latin also expresses it by continuus = following one another; e. g., triduum continuum: dies continuos tres; singuli deinceps (each one successively): alternis (of two, alternately; e. g., alternis [sc. versibus] dicere; alternis versibus contendere): one as well as the other, uterque pariter, ambo pariter (both equally): the one . . . the other, alter (rarely unus) . . . alter; hic . . . ille (this . . . that): prior . . . posterior (the former . . . the latter): the one (party) . . . the others, alii . . . alii; alii . . . pars (or partim); pars . . . alii; quidam . . . alii: the one (party) . . . the other . . . others again, alii . . . alii (or partim) . . . alii (and thus alii alternately with partim, eight times in Cic., N. D., 2, 47, 122): one . . . to the other, or the other (accusative), alter . . . alteri or alterum (of two): alius . . . alii or alium (of several; e. g., one helps the other, alter alterum or alius alium adjuvat). If, however, "other" be connected with a substantive, the substantive is repeated in Latin; e. g., to remove from one house to another, ex domo in domum migrare: one citizen obeys the other, civis civi paret: one hand washes the other, manus manum lavat or fricat: one fears the other, timent inter se: happy at one time, unhappy at another, alias beatus, alias miser: the one this . . . the other that, alius aliud; alii alia: the one so, the other differently, alius aliter: one here, another there, alius alibi: one hither, another thither, alius alio: one time so, another time differently, aliud alias: both the one party and the other are threatened with dangers, but from different quarters, aliis aliunde est periculum. If "one" refer to a substantive previously mentioned, it is rendered by unus (opposed to two or more) or aliquis (if indefinite): as, there were several elephants there; have you seen one? plures aderant elephanti; num unum vidisti? here are your books; have you read one of them? hic sunt tui libri; num aliquem ex iis legisti? If by "one" an individual is emphatically denoted and singled out from a multitude, unus is used, usually with the preposition ex or de, or the meaning is expressed by a simple ex or inter; as, there was among them one of the Nervians, named Verticus, erat intus unus Nervius, nomine Vertico: Fufius, one of my intimate friends, Fufius, unus ex meis intimis: to command one of the chief leaders of sedition to be taken away, abripi unum insignem ducem seditionum jubēre: the leader himself, one of the most rash and daring, dux ipse inter stolidissimos ferocissimosque. ‖ To denote agreement, concourse, &c., one and the same, unus, idem. JN. unus atque idem; unus idemque; e. g., at one time (to do several things, &c.); uno or eodem tempore; uno eodemque tempore: it is all one, idem est, par est (vid. Cic., Muren., 19, 41): if followed by "whether . . . or," nihil interest utrum . . . an (vid. Cic., Rosc. Am., 41, 120): it is not one and the same thing to rob and to fight, aliud est rapere, aliud pugnare (Liv., 1, 12; cf. Cic., Cæl., 3, 6). ‖ In denoting time, and (more rarely) measure, unus is usually omitted, unless an opposition of a greater number be implied; e. g., the matrons mourned for Brutus one whole year, as for a father, matronæ annum, ut parentem, Brutum luxerunt: not more than one bushel, non plus modio: it seemed to be all one blaze, omnia velut continenti flammā ardēre visa (Curt., 3, 8, 18; cf. G., 8, 15, extr.). ‖ One and a half, unus dimidiatusque; sesquialter. The Latin forms many compounds with sesqui; e. g., a foot and a half in length, sesquipedalis; an inch and a half, sesquidigitus: of an inch and a half in length, sesquidigitalis: a pound and a half, sesquilibra: a bushel and a half, sesquimodius: an acre and a half, sesquijugerum: an hour and a half, sesquihora: a month and a half, sesquimensis: to be a month and a half old, sesquimense esse natu: a day and a half's work, sesquiopera: one year and a half, sex mensium et anni spatium (Georges); unus annus cum dimidio, or et sex menses (Kraft).

ONE, pron. indef. ‖ Denoting an indefinite individual out of a definite number, any one, aliquis; unus aliquis (emphatically implying that the individual is only one); e. g., one of you, aliquis ex vobis: one of the early kings, aliquis priorum regum: one of yours, unus aliquis ex tuis: one of the party, vir factionis. If = a certain one, a definite individual, whom one may not or will not name, quidam; as, one of the colleagues, quidam de collegis. But if "one" is = any one, i. e., denotes an indefinite individual out of an indefinite number, we find quispiam, also aliquis; e. g., one may perhaps say, forsitan quispiam dixerit; dixerit hic aliquis (poetically): one will perhaps call me unjust, iniquum me esse quispiam dicet: one will say perhaps, dicet aliquis forte: ☞ (a) after si, nisi, ne, num, quando, ubi, and generally, in conditional propositions, also without the conjunction, quis must be used instead of aliquis or quispiam; as, if any one has once sworn falsely, no credit should afterward be given to him, ubi semel quis pejeraverit, ei postea credi non oportet. (b) In negative propositions, and in such as contain a negative sense, (any) "one" is expressed by quisquam (substantively) and ullus (adjectively); e. g., is there among men any one of whom you think better? estne quisquam omnium mortalium, de quo melius existimes tu? is there one thing of so much worth, or one thing so desirable that, &c., an est ulla res tanti, aut commodum ullum tam expetendum, ut, &c.: just as good . . . as (any) one, tam . . . quam qui maxime; e. g., I am as good a patriot as any one, tam sum amicus reipublicæ, quam qui maxime: or by juxta ac (atque), &c.; e. g., instructed in Greek and Roman literature as well as any one, literis Græcis atque Latinis juxta ac doctissimo eruditus (i. e., as the most learned). Since, however, the pronouns do not express our "one" in its full extent, we must frequently express the sense by other words or phraseology: (A) by the passive; (1) personally; if one is guilty of a fault, si qua culpa committitur: one can not live happily except by living virtuously, non potest jucunde vivi, nisi cum virtute vivatur: it is foolish for one to fear what can not be avoided, stultum est timēre id quod vitari non potest; (2) impersonally; one lives, vivitur: evening is coming on, one must go home, jam advesperascit, domum revertendum est; (3) by ablatives absolute; if one assumes this case, hoc posito: (B) by the active; (1) the third person singular; (a) of impersonal active verbs; e. g., one ought, oportet; one may, licet; (b) one says, inquit (parenthetically); e. g., it is impossible, says one, that all anger can be eradicated from the mind, non potest, inquit, omnis ira ex animo tolli: (2) the first person plural, when the speaker includes himself under the unknown subject; e. g., what one wishes one gladly believes, quæ volumus, credimus libenter: (3) the second person singular indicative, subjunctive, or imperative, in impassioned exhortations, demands, and statements; e. g., one does not see God, yet he may be recognized as God by his works, Deum non vides, tamen ut Deum agnoscis ex operibus ejus.

Especially, the second person singular in the subjunctive, where we say, one can, might, would have; e. g., one might have seen, vidēres: one would have believed, putares; (4) the participle present masculine in general propositions; e. g., if one aims at the first place, it is commendable to attain to the second or third only, prima sequentem, honestum est in secundis et tertiis consistere. (c) If the English "one" is in Latin the subject of the infinitive, it is not expressed separately; e. g., humanity requires that one pardon his friend, ignoscere amico humanum est. But with the infinitive esse, and with those verbs which in the passive have two nominatives (of the subject and predicate), as, vidēri, fieri, existimari, we find, at least, the accusative of the predicate; e. g., the greatest riches is for one to be contented with his lot, maximæ sunt divitiæ, contentum suis rebus esse.

ONE ANOTHER, alius alii or alium; of two, alter, alteri, or alterum (= one ... the other); inter se, among or between themselves, is used when the predicate is referred only to the personality of a subject of the third person plural, named in the same clause, in the nominative or accusative case, rarely in any other: ☞ se inter se is not Latin; vid. Gernh Cic., Læl., 22, 82; Hand, Tursell., 3, p. 387, sq.): inter ipsos (among themselves, when the predicate of a proposition is to be referred to such a subject exclusively, and in opposition to all others; the subject is then mentioned in the same clause, either in the genitive, dative, or ablative, or in the clause immediately preceding): mutuo (mutually; ☞ invicem here would be unclassical, vicissim has a different meaning): ultro et citro, ultro citroque, ultro citro (hither and thither, on both sides). ☞ Ultro citro is probably post-Augustan; vid. Hand, Tursell., 2, p. 86, sqq.): they help one another, alter alterum adjuvat; alius alii subsidium ferunt: they keep nothing from one another, nihil quidquam secretum alter ab altero habet: they (two armies) did not observe one another, neutri alteros cernebant: they blamed one another, alius alium increpabant: to love one another, amare inter se; inter se diligere (☞ invicem or mutuo diligere not classical: vicissim diligere, formed by the moderns from the misunderstood passage, Cic., Læl., 9, 30, is wrong): we love one another, amamus inter nos (☞ not amamus nos inter nos): to look at one another, to fear one another, &c., inter se aspicere, timēre, &c.: to strike one another, alter alterum verberibus cædit (properly, with cudgels): inter se confligere (figuratively, of battle): to be at variance with one another, inter se discordare, dissidēre, dissentire: to kiss one another, mutua dare oscula: to kiss and embrace one another, osculari et amplexari inter se (Plaut., Mil. Glor., 5, 40): to render services to one another, officiis mutuo respondēre: to eat one another, mutuâ carne inter se vesci: to meet one another, sibi occurrere or obviam fieri: to show kindness to one another, ultro citroque beneficia dare et accipere: to send messengers to one another, nuncios ultro citroque mittere.

ONE-EYED, luscus, cocles (born with one eye): altero oculo captus or orbus (that has lost one eye): altero lumine orbus (Plin., 35, 10, 36): unoculus (general term, one-eyed; mostly in comic writers. ☞ Avoid the later compound, monoculus): unum oculum in mediâ fronte habens; uno oculo in mediâ fronte insignis (having one eye in the middle of the forehead; of the Cyclops).

ONE-HANDED, unimănus: alterâ manu orbus (after Plin., 35, 10, 36, altero lumine orbus).
